

NEVER AGAIN

by Aurelia

Last summer, I went to a city camp in New York with my best friends Anna and Julia.

We stayed in a big hotel next to the Empire State Building. It was so beautiful. We all felt excited and nervous.

One day, we went to Times Square, it was so cool.

Anna, Julia and I left our group.

There were so many people and lights.

Back then we simply enjoyed the moment and didn't pay attention to the group anymore.

After a few minutes, Anna panicked badly!
Julia's heart started to beat fast, and I held onto Julia's and Anna's arm.

We lost the group!

After 10 minutes Anna remembered that she had google maps on her phone. That was our salvation!

A stylized, futuristic city map rendered in shades of blue and cyan. The map features a grid of streets and buildings, with glowing lines representing data or navigation paths. A prominent yellow dashed line starts from a yellow arrow pointing towards a cluster of buildings on the left and leads to a tall, illuminated skyscraper on the right. The skyscraper is surrounded by a glowing yellow circle. The overall aesthetic is high-tech and digital.

She entered the name of our hotel and it then showed us the way.

We waited in the hotel lobby for the rest of our group.
After a few minutes they arrived at the hotel.

Everyone was happy to see the others again. At the end the guide praised us for our cleverness. We all said,

“Never again!”
